FROM BELL'S WEEKLY MESSEN-GER.

Danger of Portugal.

It is the misfortune of the minor Euro pean States, whose feeble and languishing resources scarcely suffer them to encourage any other ambition than that of maintaining their petty territories inviolate, and escaping injury from their more powerful neighbours, almost uniformly to be drawn into the vortex, at least into a participation of the hazards of hostility, whenever the greater powers, who give a tone to the policy and preside over the face of Europe, engage in war with each other.

This has too frequently been the case of Holland, Switzerland, and the minor states of Italy, and is likely, in the present contest, to be the fate of Portugal. The safe. ty of Portugal, it is said, depends upon the neutrality of Spain. If Spain be converted into an enemy of Great Britain, she will be equally hestile to her allies, and will then have a common interest with France to effect the subjugation of Portugal.-Spain, it is asserted, will open herself to the reception of French troops, and the armies of Bonaparte, crossing the Peniasula, will can pel Partugal to renounce the alliance of Great-Britain, and connect herself with the common cause.

That such will be the object and eaterprise of France and Spain, there can be that the situation of Portugal is hazardous, but it requires no very superstitious faith to believe that she may survive the shock, no very great stretch of considence to pronounce that her alliance with Great Britain, will maintain her inviolate and unbrøken. We are not without precedents of the degrees of fear which Portugal need suffer from the Court of Madrid. The events of the campaign of 1762, when a small British force repelled the invading armies of Spain, at a-time, too, when a Spanish-srmy possessed something of its former discipline and gallantry, sufficiently evince what a British army might now effect, in the wane of Spanish tactics and military

From France is the principal danger .-Let us supsesse that the Emperor of the French resolves to divert a pertion of his troops from the positions which they at present occupy. This is hazardous, now that a continental war is manaced; now that and agreesion. the armies on the right and left banks of At Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Bois the Rhine must be effectually strengthened; I be Duc, French officers and stricters found now that Holland, on which side an attack I in the streets after dark, have been brown is first expected, must consume a greater into the canals by the pe ple; several of force, no less to repel the enemies of France, than that she herself may be held ling out during the day, they have met in subjection; now, too, when upon the south a fearful storm is apprevended from Italy, and Austria, fluctuating in an uncertain neutrality, cannot be trusted with. out an overawing army to watch every movement of ker policy.

Let us suppose, how-ver, that France provides a considerable depot of troops a Bayonne. They must march four hundred miles before they touch the frontiers of Portugal; their course extends through a country difficult for the progress of an army, and almost sestitute of provisions; they can subsist with difficulty, and must be tardy from an immense baggage. Time would be given to Portugal to provide for a vigorous defence, a defence easy and certain of success, if conducted with common spirit and gallantry. Here, too, the alliance of England would interpose and spread a shield before her.

But let us concede that Portugal, with the other secondary powers of the continent, is obliged to receive the yoke. Happily for mankind, the safety of Europe dees not depend upon France being able to take a temporary possession of Portugal. It is in the power of England, at any time, to block up the two rivers by which that country can alone receive sup. plies of grain, and thereby cut off the subsistence of a French army, and oblige them to abandon their conquest, or retain it at an expence beyond its value.

Portugal, abstracted from her colonies, is of no weight in Europe; without the of the choice of Electors, in November Brazils, she would be overlooked in a ge- last, in this, inspired the Democratsvith neral scheme of politics. Let us consider Portugal in the possession of France. What is her value? What resources does she supply for the pillage of French armies, - what new vigor does she add to the arm of tyranny and domination? The power which has assumed the maritime ascendancy would seize her dominions in Africa and America. The name of Portugal being extinct, and the obligations to her cancelled, (which would be the consequence of her subjection to France,) England might justly possess herself of her colonies, to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy; and thus in the general division and scramble for prizes, England would be the eventual gainer -with this special difference, that the gains of Bonaparte would be the plunder of a robber, those of England, the acquisitions of prudence and friendship.

The wines of Pertugal might indeed find their way to Great Bitain; and thus supply its wretched inhabitants with a bare subsistence; but without the consumption of Brazil; the resources it affords and the shipping it creates, and employs, Portugal would stak to the lowest state of degrada. tion; and having once supplied a harvest to the French marauters, she would be relinquished almost as speedily as obtained, when no temptation was left of fu ure plun.

Whilst the occupation of Portugel by France must necessarily throw the treasures and commerce of the Brazils into the lap of Great Britain, Bonaparte will hesi. tate before he decides upon its subjection; he knows that England regards the sanctity of treaties, and the interests of inferior states; he knows the generosity of our commercial policy, and that w'- lat the colonies of these states are not subsert ient to French ambition, we shall never attempt to divert their produce from their accustomed channels; but he king ve that England will never suffer the colonies of any subjugated state to become the prev of his but little doubt: as little is there, I knwise, I rapacity, and the means of his aggrandise.

> Let us, therefore, in case Portugal be attacker, assume the language and conduct which the accasion calls for. If we blockade by sea wherever the enemy adjances : if we seperate the colonies from even country which he enters, and prevent such countries, as we have done in the case of those which border on the Elbe and Weser, from all external commerce, France will soon be taught, that she is only weakened by the extension of her conquests which are thrown into the hands of her rival, without hazard of battle, or contamination of honor.

> > LONDON, March 14.

The herrible excesses of French typenny have, according to private letters, received yesterday from the Hajue, et length produced throughout the Bravian Republic, a spirit of biscontent, which has broken out in repeated acts of restance them have been drowned , and when wa'e with insults or threats, which the have resented with imprisonment or fine. At Maslandaleigs, seven French soldies, with a serjeant, on duty in the Corps de Gnard on the banks of the Muse, have disapeared, and are supplied to have been grown into that by the fisherman of that allage, which is reduced to beggary since the war. A report was current on the 17th, tlat as soon as the French troops shall recive a reinfercement of twenty thousand men. said to be on their march from thir army on the coast, the most populouscities would be declared in a state of stegs The Batavian troops, though more nuterous than the French, have hitherto received. quiet spectators : but ar address tethem, written in spirited language by som unknown person, who calls on them o assist in delivering their country from its foreign voke, has made a great impresion, and several duels have been the onse. quence between them and the French General Vignolie has has been obliged o seperate the troops of the two nations both at Haerlem and Utrecht, by sendingthem to different quarters. It is said, the the Batavian Directors, forced to resin by Simonville, have entered a protest, thich this agent of Bousparte prevented rem being printed and distributed.

NEW-YORK, May 7.

Captain Wilson, of the brig Atlantic, at. rived yesterday from Antigua, soforms us that the British fleet under Admiral Coch. rane had arrived at that island about a for. night before he sailed, and proceeded to leeward; and that a few days afterwards Commotore Hood's advice boat arrived with intelligence that a squadron of twenty sail of vessels of war, consisting of French and Spanish, had arrived to windward: that dispatches were immediately forward. ed to recall Admiral Cochrane, that the militia were again under arms, and that an embargo was hourly expected.

May 9. We have the pleasure of knowing that our fears respecting the fate of the people who had committed themselves to the mercy of the waves in the long boat of the ship Jupiter, were groundless. They have been providentially preserved. This in. tremely interesting intelligence is thus announced in the Bosten Gazette of Mon.

We are happy to learn that the passengers and crew of the ship Jupiter, who embarked on board the long boat, were fallen in with by several fishing schooners, soon after they parted with the yawl, and happily rescued from their perilous situation. Mr. Gilbert J. L. Smissaert, one of the passengers, arrived at Boston on Tuesday, from Marblehead, where he was brought by a vessel who received him from one of the fishing boats. He informs that the people preserved with him were all in health, and distributed arong the several fishing ves-

Captain Williams, from Cape Francois, informs us that on the 19th of April, about forty miles, to the northward of the Mona passage, an engagement took place between the French privateer, formerly the Lily sloop of war, and the British slo op of war Reynard, which continued an hour and as half, and terminated with the blowing us of the Lily. Her crew consisted of one hundred and sixty men, of v/hom, we are sorry to add, sixty were killed during the action, sixty perished with the vessel, and forty were preserved. Capeain W. con. firms the account of the return of Dessa. lines and Christophe vo the Cape with a part of their army; but their return it was reported, was in consequence of their expecting a visit at the Cape from the Rochefort squadron.
